CHARACTERISTIC 2

Characteristic 2: Text-genealogical variants are part of a type-2 variation.

N.B.: All variations which are used for the development of the text-genealogical tree of Lanselot van Denemerken are type-2 variations. The non-type-2 variations are not displayed in this Appendix; the type-2 variations concerned are presented in the other chapters of this Appendix, concerning the eleven characteristics of genealogical variants.

CHARACTERISTIC 3

Characteristic 3: Text-genealogical variants must be grammatically adequate and be positioned in a grammatically correct context.

N.B.: The recognition of this characteristic has not been automated; a parser is not available.

CHARACTERISTIC 4

Characteristic 4a: text-genealogical variants belong to the same word classes.
Characteristic 4b: text-genealogical variants are substantives (= substantive nouns) or (main) verbs, except auxiliaries (in Dutch: 'hebben', 'zijn', 'zullen', 'willen', etc.), possibly in argumented combination with other surrounding words that do not belong to these word categories.

4.1 VARIANTS CONCERNING ADJECTIVES

N.B.: In the source software 'AJ' has been defined as follows:
AJ = ' alt awt bas bat besser beter bitter drovig edel edelen edelste ertsgen fir fris '
+ 'frisger frisser gawde gawt golden grakios gratios gratius grone grose grosse '
+ 'grossen grosser grot grote groten groter gulden guldin hilge hilige hog hoge hogen '
+ 'jong jonge jonk jun latste leste liver loalder nederen noalder rin rine rode roder '
+ 'roden rojalder sgon sgone sgonder sot sgonre sote soten sterk stinkenden swar '
+ 'valsge valsger vast veste vro vrog '

CHARACTERISTIC 5

Characteristic 5: Variants in rhyming position in verses are text-genealogical, regardless the word class they belong to.

5.1 CHARACTERISTIC 5: (POTENTIAL) GENEALOGICALLY INFORMATIVE CASES

5.1.1 CHARACTERISTIC 5: CLEAR INFORMATIVE CASES

02.0085 09 comb.: 02-06-07-08-|05-09-12-13-14-="~din"|"~viloni" (wds r.p;5)
Comment: I could have decided to integrate into this formula the fact that text 10 has 'vilini' and text 11 'voloni'. However, I do not feel comfortable with these words, because I fear that they may be nonsense words. (Remember that this variation formula, is, like the other formulas in this paragraph, in italics, to draw attention to the importance of this formula, eventually appearing in §12.2.8: 'The remainder: Good Variation Formulas'.)

Comment: One could claim here that both words are in totally different contexts and that therefore they cannot be used as competitive variants. However, the point is that texts 11, 12 and 13 have "dat gi sulks lit", while the other texts have something like "dat gi u (bat) besit".

02.0208 08  comb.: 09-11-|02-04-05-06-07-08-="~hastelikhit"|"~hastikhit" (wds r.p;5)
          Comment: In Plantijn 1573, fo. V2 recto, the lemma "Kompt haest of haestelick" implies that we should be careful in using variants of 'haest' because of the danger parallelism. Admittedly, I realize that 'haest' versus 'haestelick' is not completely the same as 'hastelikhit' versus 'hastikhit'.

          Comment: 'verman' does not occur in the German texts 06-07-08; therefore it may be a parallelism.
02.0293 12  comb.: 09-10-11-12-13-|01-02-03-05-06-07-08-="~ansag"|"~sag" (wds r.p;5)
          Comment: One may consider the difference between both variants to be a non-informative prefix 'an'. Furthermore, one could say that this difference is caused by a (nondetected) difference in word order.

          Comment: The MNW, I, col. 1102, warns us that 'bevaen' and 'bestaen' can mean the same;
                   possibly, the danger of parallelism exists...

          Comment: From the MNW, IX, col. 117, we conclude that, according to Kilianus, 'verswijnen' and 'verdwinen' can be parallelisms.

          Comment: The MNW, IV, col. 2488, warns us that 'noyael' is the same as 'loyaal' and that the difference or relation between both words is not clear.

          Comment: Text 02 has '~sagtn' a nonsense reading for '~sagen'. I do not integrate this 01-reading into the formula, since the disturbance in the word picture is rather big and possibly confusing for copyists. Nevertheless, I mistrust the variants, because a long 's' resembles an 'l' quite closely, which implies the danger of parallelism.

CHARACTERISTIC 6

Characteristic 6: The textual differences between text-genealogical may never be ‘accidental’, like:
6a. Orthographic or diacritical differences.
6b. Differences in word boundaries.
6c. Nonsense words or obvious slips of the pen or the typesetter.
The detection of characteristic 6c has not been automated yet.

CHARACTERISTIC 7

Characteristic 7: Text-genealogical variants are not (potential) parallelisms:

7a. The differences between the variants may not be mere differences in inflection.

7b. The difference between the 'cores' of the variants must not merely be a (phonetic) difference in a range of vowels.

7c. The differences between variants may not be mere differences between the different vocabularies of languages or dialects. All variants must be words that are generally known in the languages or dialects of the text versions.

7d. The (cores of the) variants must be rare. This rule tempts to prevent the use of synonymous parallelisms, like for instance variants in different names (of the same beings).
